Letter from the Prioress

*Sister Judith Murphy, OSB
Prioress*

*D*ear Friends,

I hope you will enjoy the new look in this issue of Sacro Speco. Appropriately, the inclusion of color photos comes to you as we experience all around us our world in full bloom this summer. Here at the monastery we experience the brilliant growth in our community gardens, the sound of birdsongs; all the while we enjoy the lush greenery of grass, trees, and the colorful flowers.

Even though the church calls this “ordinary time” in the liturgical calendar, it is a time when we may practice St. Benedict’s way of finding God bountiful in daily life. Whether we find ourselves drawn to God when our lives feel broken or when we see creation’s beauty, we are called to remember God is always there.

We hope that the addition of color to the photos and the new stories herein will bring alive to you the connections and concerns we share in the spirit of Saints Benedict and Scholastica, that in all things God may be glorified.

In peace,

Letters From You

SCHOOL MEMORIES

I am forever grateful for the sisters who taught me and grounded me in the Benedictine values at St. Scholastica Academy. To name a few, but missing many: Srs. Mercedes, Mary Paul, Ignatia, Aurelia, Judith, Sebastian, Eleanore, and lay teachers, Patricia Flood and Miss Battista. I now have the privilege of knowing better Sr. Judy Murphy and Sr. Benita Coffey. One of my favorite St. Scholastica Academy memories: Working after school decorating a bulletin board on the south staircase landing, late on a winter afternoon, pulling on my coat to dash home and hearing in the dark and empty halls your beautiful, high voices singing evening prayers. I stopped to listen and was filled with such peace and a sense of sacro speco. What a gift to a young woman! Thank you.

Monastery News

Sister Benita Coffey, our monastery's Social Justice Promoter, coordinated a peace walk for the neighborhood in which our monastery stands after a shooting occurred this spring. She worked with the local police district and notified neighbors. On Wednesday, April 6th, approximately 100 people gathered to walk and pray for peace. Many of our sisters were able to walk with the neighbors, including Sister Vivian, who at age 102, carried the holy water to bless the site of the tragedy. The Chicago Tribune, local television news, and other media covered the event. We hope it inspires other communities that face gun violence to stand up for peace, as well. Since the event, Sister Judith Zonsius coordinated a documentary film screening for Sisters and Oblates to educate themselves about the corporate interests involved in the gun industry. Sisters also attended a meeting about Citizens United, a SCOTUS decision that permits corporations and individuals like the NRA to use limitless financial resources to fuel the availability of guns. In order to prevent further gun violence, many Sisters have signed a petition that calls for gun dealer licensing that is being circulated by www.peopleforasafersociety.com. The Sisters also encourage others to continue voting faithfully and responsibly.

The monastery's St. Joseph Court (an assisted living and skilled care center) offers enrichment courses to the sisters who reside there. From art class to theater class, the Sisters have an array of options from which to choose. Recently, the Sisters who participate in the Theater class put on a review of skits and songs for the monastery's Sisters and staff. Included in rehearsals and/or production were Sisters Anne Krall, Margaret Ann Holtz, Joanna Trapp, Mercedes Moore, and Victoria Marconi. Thanks to Lisa Wagner-Carollo and Still Point Theatre Collective for their on-going work with our monastery!

Sister Karen Bland was selected, along with 14 other Catholic Sisters, for the inaugural Sisters in Public Leadership Project. The national project is an initiative of Faith in Public Life, a strategy center for the faith community, and NETWORK, a Catholic Social Justice Lobby. The event brought together Sisters working in high-level social justice roles to learn about emerging strategies and communication skills to further their work. Sister Karen is putting the training to good use back at her ministry site where she serves as Executive Director at Grand Valley Catholic Outreach in Colorado. The organization works to prevent homelessness and assist those who experience homelessness, including many veterans.

Every March, Catholics celebrate National Catholic Sisters Week as part of Women's History Month. This year our monastery hosted an evening for young women called "Pray. Connect. Celebrate!" Sister Belinda Monahan coordinated the event and Sisters Patricia Cielinski, Virginia Jung, Susan Quaintance, Mary Ann O'Ryan, and Judith Zonsius all helped out, from preparing food to welcoming the women to the monastery. The evening was such a success that Sister Belinda is now coordinating a quarterly group, Young Women and the Word, that invites women to the monastery to explore scripture and experience community together. If you are interested in learning more or attending, visit www.osbchicago.org/word to learn about the next gathering that will take place in late July.

Sister Patricia Crowley traveled to London in May to attend a conference on Islam, as part of her extended work with the Monastic Interreligious Dialogue. She made a number of new connections, learned more about the religion, and also had a chance to connect with some of the English Benedictine communities while she was there.

{Sister Story}

Sister Mariella Hathorn

Sister Mariella’s office is near the north entrance of our monastery. If you have visited the monastery over the last 18 years, you have likely seen her at work with her fellow sisters. As Director of St. Joseph Court, she oversees the care of our monastery’s elders. “I love each Sister in her own special way,” says Sister Mariella.

Sister Mariella’s compassion for others perhaps is modeled after the Sisters who first stirred in her a desire to become a Benedictine. “I was inspired by the Sisters themselves,” she recalls. “What they taught, especially religion, and how to develop a deeper love of God through Mass and the sacraments and treating others with reverence.” She notes that they were “excellent teachers and models of their Benedictine values.”

Sister Mariella first entered the Benedictine community at St. Joseph Monastery in St. Marys, PA. She says she remembers a few surprises in those early years: “Getting up so early!” She also remembers the fun her fellow younger sisters had on a feast day and the “joy of a simpler lifestyle.”

Over the years, she taught grades one through six at schools in the Pennsylvania towns of St. Marys, Lucinda, and Warren. She says, fondly, that it is the people she remembers the most from her years of teaching and then service as principal. For example, she recalls that St. Joseph Elementary School in Warren, PA only had 48 students in 1969. The people in the town were incredibly supportive and by 1989, the school population had grown to 225 students.

When she looks back on her life, she is grateful for each of her ministries: “the privilege of teaching, being principal, prioress in St. Marys, PA, and administering to the needs of our elderly sisters, especially those in the infirmary.” Having transferred to St. Scholastica Monastery in 1995, Sister Mariella joyfully recalls that as of last month she has been part of the Benedictine Sisters of Chicago for more than two decades. “I have found a prayerful, caring community. I feel their support and love,” she says.

She says for those who may be considering entering religious life today, she would ask them “What are you truly looking for?” Often the answer to that question helps to clarify one’s path in life. For Mariella, it is clear that she found the path that God had planned for her. “I am extremely grateful for 21 years of joy and peace here in Chicago with all the Sisters.”

Meet the New Oblate Candidates, Oblates

Sophie (Sophie) Ruskin has three daughters, although she says, “the oldest one lives in heaven” after she lost her battle with cancer as a young woman. Sophie said her faith is the foundation of her life. It is what sustained her after the death of her daughter and part of her faith experience has been walking the path of a Benedictine Oblate.

Sophie recalls that even as a young child she had a strong faith in God. She has been an active member of St. Pius Parish for 50 years and always active in the Diocesan Council of Catholic Women. She is a business owner of a women’s dress shop and a religious articles store named Angels of Hope, both located in Pueblo, CO.

On Sunday, April 17th, Sophie deepened her faith yet again and stood alongside Rose Guererro as they enrolled to become Benedictine Oblate Candidates. Sophie and Rose are among the four new candidates of the St. Scholastica Monastery Benedictine Oblate community this year.

Rose, like Sophie, lives in Pueblo, CO. She is the mother of three children, one of whom died in February. Her faith has always been important to her. She shares that she has always been involved in the church, beginning with her family of origin and continuing with her time in Catholic school through high school. She became an LPN when her children were young and realized the importance of nursing and how much she enjoyed taking care of people. She became an RN and was active as a nurse for 30 years. “As a single mother, I relied on God to get me through each day,” she notes. Although she had to stop nursing after a serious illness, she said she believes God gave her the strength to survive so she could help others, even though she could no longer be a nurse.

She has been active in the Diocesan Council of Catholic Women, starting as a teenager with her mother. She felt one of her blessings after she retired was being able to increase her work with the Council. She is now active on the national level. She said she saw that organization as an avenue for unity of women, as a way for them to live out the Gospel values, and to help women on their spiritual journey. She is also active in social justice issues and feels that being an Oblate has helped her keep up that commitment.

Mary Cunningham and Michal Lewon also enrolled as Oblate Candidates this spring. On March 20th in Chicago, they stood before their fellow Oblates and the Benedictine Sisters to announce their intent. Michal is a priest of the Chicago Archdiocese who has been serving as a chaplain at the University of Illinois, Chicago and will soon serve at a local parish. Although a priest, he looks forward to deepening his connection to the monastic tradition and Benedictine spirituality. When asked how he decided to make this step in his faith journey, he responded, “At some point people have to stop thinking about doing something and just do it. For me, contacting Sister Benita was a turning point in my life.”

Joining them that day was Seth Alexander who, after a year of candidacy, made his profession to become a Benedictine Oblate. Seth is a Ph.D.

candidate at Loyola University, studying Catholic medieval women’s history and theology. He reflected, “I am so happy to have made this step of Oblation...and like Benedict says at the end of the Rule, this is only the beginning of a journey.”

Cañon City alumnae will gather August 19- 21 at The Abbey Events Complex for an all-school reunion, held with the alumni of The Abbey. ## Alumna Puts Spotlight on Racial Justice

M “My junior year theology class with Mr. Donahue around social justice has had a profound impact on my career and life,” reflected Brittany Hogan, SSA ‘03.

Brittany, pictured above, now serves as Coordinator of Educational Equity and Diversity for the Rockwood School District, the largest in the St. Louis area. She oversees their social justice and diversity initiatives, along with their busing program that desegregates schools.

In the 1980s, a Missouri Supreme Court ruling found that the St. Louis Public School Board of Education and the State of Missouri were responsible for maintaining a segregated school system. School districts responded with a desegregation busing system that brought St. Louis city students to suburban schools and vice versa.

The Rockwood School District, for which Brittany works, is the largest participant in the busing program. She is responsible for coordinating the transportation of 1,700 St. Louis city students daily to the suburban school district. “In a snapshot, my work here has focused on educational equity, social justice, race, and the impacts those things have on how we educate our children, work with people who look different from us, and how we teach children about the world.” She notes that she is the youngest administrator and the only Black female in the district.

Brittany says that her greatest hope is “to see my students becoming global citizens who can talk about inequities and equity and who want to make a difference in the world they live in.” It’s not an easy job, but her faith is a support for her. It “is the center of everything I do,” she said. “Living a life of service has always seemed like the way for me to say ‘Thank you’ to God.... Every day I try to do a job I can be proud of, working out of a space of love and empathy for others.”

When asked what advice she would give to others who seek to make a difference in the world, she says, “Follow your passion, pray, and be conscious in the moment.”

Where do you find peace in challenging times?

St. Benedict looked to the Psalms

by Sister Susan Quaintance

Folks are unsettled. Between unprecedented levels of violence in our city and neighborhood, a presidential primary season revealing a deeply divided country, and climate change that brings never-before-seen threats, to name but a few current realities, I note something in people's faces that I don't really remember in my lifetime: sort of a mix of bewilderment, wariness, and fear.

In addition to wrestling with all the same uncertainties that neighbors and colleagues are, I wonder what my response should be as a Benedictine? Pondering this question, I make a mental dash once more to the Psalms. They are, of course, the same Psalms prayed by Benedict and the communities he founded in the sixth century of the Common Era. Their moment, though almost unimaginably different than our own in circumstance and particulars, must have been similar in disease and anxiety. The collapse of the Roman Empire in 476 resulted in political instability and social chaos. Sound familiar?

What follows is a shortened reflection on the Psalms in a series, "Seeking Peace", that I wrote for the American Monastic Newsletter during the last presidential election cycle in 2012:

What do the psalms say about seeking peace? When that question occurred to me one night during evening prayer, it struck me as one worth exploring a bit. What text does a Benedictine spend more time with over the course of a lifetime than the Book of Psalms? The Rule itself quotes the psalms a whopping 71 times. The psalms are the river that flows over us, shaping our stony hearts into something closer to what they are supposed to be. So I spent a Saturday morning looking at where the word peace shows up in the psalms and also where those psalms fall in the Liturgy of the Hours setting that my community uses.* It wasn't too terribly scientific or exhaustive, but it reminded me of something I already knew and prompted my gratitude for something I didn't.

The reminder: Peace is ultimately God's work, not ours. Obviously that does not excuse us from whatever we can do to make peace ("Turn away from evil and do good; seek peace and follow after it." Psalm 34:15). Peace building seems especially connected to speaking honestly and living authentically ("[God] has granted peace in your borders." Psalm 147:14a).

Peace will be the hallmark of the reign of God's anointed one (Psalm 72). This is an important truth to hold onto as we make our way in a world that is anything but peaceful. As we try to educate ourselves about global genocides and torture, as we search for the facts in the mudslinging of another presidential election, as we attempt to mend our sometimes fractured communities, we must acknowledge that our work alone will not be sufficient.

That realization, on a bad day, can be discouraging. What's the point of trying? This is where my gratitude comes in. One of the things I looked at in my morning of psalm study was when my community prays the psalms that talk about peace. Some are prayed in the morning, but almost twice as many are prayed in the evening. After a long day of doing what we do, saying what we say, living with whom we live with, and humbly having to admit that it's another day of coming up short, it is good to hear that God works through our small efforts, that God has the ultimate responsibility, that it is in and through God alone that the promise of peace is fulfilled. What a relief! Knowing that, we will be able to "fall peacefully asleep" as soon as we lie down (Psalm 4:9). Or, at least, that's the hope.

There are three psalms that mention peace which are omitted from our Liturgy of the Hours book: 83, 109, and 120. They are prayers against different enemies. I've never been in favor of leaving out the "cursing" psalms from prayer; instead I've always felt that using them can help us face our own violence and sinfulness. Now I find myself grateful for that editorial decision. Each of us is plenty capable of unconsciously destroying the fragile peace(s) that exist around us; we probably don't need to be awash in how the wicked willfully do it. To "seek peace" implies shunning its opposite, and these psalms would surely keep me up at night by feeding resentment and hostility. The psalms are a primer for so many aspects of right relationship, and seeking peace is no exception. May we use them so. "Peace be upon Israel" (Psalm 125:5c) . . . and all of us.
